THE FINANCIAL Conduct Authority (FCA) said yesterday it had launched a probe into the suspension of stock picker Neil Woodford’s £3.7bn equity income fund.

FCA chief executive Andrew Bailey confirmed the investigation in a letter to Treasury Committee head Nicky Morgan MP. “We have opened an investigation but cannot comment any further,” Bailey said.

The letter also revealed the FCA had been concerned about the liquidity of the Woodford Equity Income Fund (WEIF) since February last year. The FCA said it contacted the fund’s manager Link Fund Solutions in February and March 2018 regarding breaches of the 10 per cent limit on unlisted securities.

It then held monthly meetings with Link from April to December 2018 to monitor the deteriorating liquidity within the fund. In April last year, 25 per cent of the fund was invested in securities that would take between 180 and 360 days or more to liquidate. By April 2019 the proportion had risen to 33 per cent, with 32 per cent of stocks taking between 20 and 280 days to liquidate.

By 24 April, Link was sending the City watch-dog daily reports on flows in and out of the fund. During May, net outflows averaged one per cent of net asset value (NAV) per week.

The FCA said unlisted securities within the fund hit 20 per cent of NAV in February 2019, prior to the listing of some securities on Tise. The FCA said the fund used EU rules that allowed a security to be excluded from the 10 per cent limit if its issuer planned to list it within 12 months.

A Woodford spokesperson said: “We can confirm we have been contacted by the FCA... and will be cooperating fully with its investigation.”

A Link spokesperson said it “will continue to cooperate fully with the FCA throughout this process”.

BORIS Johnson cemented his position as the frontrunner to be the next Prime Minister yesterday as former Brexit secretary Dominic Raab was booted out of the race.

Raab picked up 30 votes in the second ballot of Conservative MPs, leaving him in last place – just three behind home secretary Sajid Javid.

Johnson topped the poll with 126 votes, followed by Jeremy Hunt with 46, Michael Gove on 41 and Rory Stewart on 37.

Raab’s elimination signals the departure of the contest’s most tough-talking Brexiter, with the former cabinet minister refusing to rule out suspending parliament to ensure the UK leaves the EU on 31 October with or without a deal.

The candidate to see the greatest increase in support was Stewart, who is the only contender proposing to resubmit Theresa May’s three-time rejected Brexit plan to MPs.
Next PM must lift up low income families

BEYOND the usual noise surrounding the Tory leadership contest, you may notice some headlines today about a drop in incomes for the UK’s poorest households. New research from the Institute of Fiscal Studies (IFS) and the Joseph Rowntree Foundation analyses incomes, poverty and inequality over recent years. Between two of the most recently-analysed years, 2016-17 and 2017-18, real incomes fell for the bottom quartile, remained largely flat for the middle quartiles, and grew for most of the upper quartile excepting households with the very highest incomes. The fall among low income families is attributed to “reductions in the reported amounts of working-age benefits” and, coming alongside an increase in relative poverty since 2015, is likely to fuel anger over people struggling to get by despite record levels of employment. That is not to say it’s all bad. The report also finds that income inequality, measured by the Gini coefficient (the most widely-used statistic) “barely changed” in the last recorded year, and indeed is lower than the late 1980s. Bear that in mind the next time you hear someone argue that inequality is soaring. Also consider that the top one per cent’s share of income is effectively the same now as it was at the turn of the century. Moreover, absolute poverty was “virtually unchanged” in 2017-18, leaving it “at its lowest ever level”, 16 percentage points lower than in 1997-98. Another measure of poverty, called material deprivation, showed a drop of one-fifth between 2010-11 and 2017-18. While it is wrong to argue, as some on the left do, that crippling poverty has spread throughout the UK since a Conservative Prime Minister returned to Downing Street in 2010, the party must be concerned about falling income levels at the bottom of the scale. To fix this, the remaining five Tory candidates should consider raising the National Insurance threshold to help workers on low salaries. The IFS report also reveals that “severe poverty is increasingly becoming about private renters”, demonstrating the importance of tackling housing costs. Further, it highlights the positive effect that low prices for essential goods has on struggling households, reminding us how crucial free trade, low inflation and price competition will be in post-Brexit Britain. If it’s to keep Jeremy Corbyn at bay, the Tory party must convince people on low incomes that it has the policies to improve their livelihoods.

Trade union issues call to nationalise energy firms

A TRADE union plan to nationalise the UK’s biggest energy suppliers could favour foreign investors to the denigration of British pensioners, a City lawyer has warned. Jeremy Corbyn’s Labour party, which has pledged widespread nationalisation of the energy industry, welcomed the proposal from Union, one of Britain’s largest trade unions, to bring the Big Six suppliers into government ownership.

The move was attacked by the Conservatives, whose pro-free market think tank the Institute of Economic Affairs called it “unlikely to benefit either consumers or the taxpayers who will have to pick up the bill”. A Conservative spokesperson said: “This plan would put politicians in charge of supplying energy to people’s homes – putting investment at risk and meaning higher bills for families and businesses.”

The plan suggests nationalising the assets at a so-called book value of £6bn, below the Big Six’s estimated £19.3bn combined market value.

The union recognised that foreign investors, who own EDF, Eon, Scottish Power and Npower, could bring lawsuits, adding an extra £1.5bn to the government’s costs. However it does not account for lumping UK pension funds with a higher price, costing them around one third of the market value.

“Their solution bizarrely, is going to give full value to Spanish, French German investors. But then give the low amount to British pension funds and other UK investors,” said Dan Neidle, a partner at law firm Clifford Chance.

Union argued the plan would allow Britain to tackle the climate emergency head-on through a coordinated national effort. “In an instant a green army of thousands of workers could begin helping consumers reduce their energy consumption, bills and the country’s emissions. Solar panels and hydrogen boilers could soon become the norm,” said Union boss Dave Prentis.

However, industry insiders yesterday pointed to challenger suppliers, such as Bulb, which offer renewable energy tariffs cheaper than the Big Six’s regular plans.

The union said its plans would allow smaller suppliers, like Bulb, Ovo and Octopus, to remain as independent companies. They currently hold around 30 per cent of the market.

“The retail energy market has been undergoing an incredible transition where private investment has led to competition thriving and increased choice and services for customers,” said Lawrence Slade of Energy UK.

Draghi blasted by Trump over euro’s decline

CALLUM KEOWN AND HARRY ROBERTSON
@CallumKeown1 @henryrobertson

US PRESIDENT Donald Trump hit out at European Central Bank (ECB) boss Mario Draghi yesterday, claiming his hints of fresh stimulus amounted to currency manipulation.

In a speech in Portugal yesterday, Draghi suggested the ECB could cut interest rates or expand its bond-buying programme in a bid to reinvigorate the ailing Eurozone economy.

The euro dropped 0.25 per cent against the dollar yesterday following the comments, sending European stock markets soaring.

But Trump, who has threatened to impose auto tariffs on the European Union as part of his trade policy, said it was “unfair”.

He tweeted: “Mario Draghi just announced more stimulus could come, which immediately dropped the euro against the dollar, making it unfairly easier for them to compete against the USA.

“They have been getting away with this for years, along with China and others.”

Draghi’s comments pushed the German Dax index up two per cent yesterday, while the French Cac rose 2.2 per cent.

Draghi later hit back at Trump, saying the ECB’s sole mandate is price stability and that it does not seek to control the exchange rate.

US and European stock markets were yesterday boosted by Trump saying that he will meet China’s President Xi Jinping for trade talks at next week’s G20 meeting in Osaka, Japan.

Last week, Trump said that if Xi and China did not enter into talks in Japan, tariffs on $300bn (£240bn) of Chinese imports would go live.

The tech-heavy Nasdaq stock index climbed 1.4 per cent yesterday. The Dow Jones industrial average rose 1.4 per cent, while the S&P 500 had also gained one per cent.

Announcing the meeting via Twitter, Trump said: “Had a very good telephone conversation with President Xi of China. We will be having an extended meeting next week.”

Facebook called to testify before US Congress over cryptocurrency plans

EMILY NICOLLE
@emilynicolle
THE HEAD of the US Financial Services Committee last night said Facebook should halt development of its newly-announced cryptocurrency project until US Congress and regulators can conduct a review.

Facebook launched its widely anticipated cryptocurrency initiative yesterday, with the founding support of several major businesses across multiple sectors.

Named libra after the Roman unit of measure once used to mint coins, the cryptocurrency will be managed by an independent eponymous association consisting of 28 initial founding companies including Uber, Visa, Vodafone and Ebay.

Chairperson Maxine Waters said Facebook executives should face scrutiny on the project, as the social media firm has “repeatedly shown a disregard for the protection and careful use of this data.”

Built on a new open-source blockchain and backed by its own reserve in Geneva, Facebook said the coin will be tethered to a basket of currencies in order to reduce volatility. It hopes the reserve will be supported by central banks from the US, the UK, Europe, Japan, and Switzerland among others.

HARRY ROBERTSON
@henryrobertson

MARK Carney, governor of the Bank of England (BoE), said yesterday that the evolution of monetary policy in recent years has helped give Europe’s economy “a bright future”.

Carney highlighted in particular the development of forward guidance in the wake of the financial and Eurozone crises.

Forward guidance is clear communication from a central bank about what it is likely to do to interest rates in the future.

Speaking in Sintra, Portugal, Carney said: “The experience in the euro area and UK demonstrates how guidance can be effective in managing expectations as circumstances change.”

He said it had dampened interest rate volatility, which had allowed monetary policy stimulus to work more effectively in a calmer environment.

Carney said his comments contained “no messages – coded or clarion” about tomorrow’s BoE rates decision.

Leadsom defends Boris U-turn over Heathrow runway expansion plan

ALEXANDRA ROGERS

A KEY ALLY of Boris Johnson has defended his likely shift to stop opposing the Heathrow third runway.

Andrea Leadsom, who threw her weight behind Johnson’s campaign to be the next Prime Minister yesterday, told LBC: “I think he has changed his view over time, as is absolutely right that politicians do when the facts change, when more clarity becomes available about particular policies.”

Johnson, who is the favourite to replace Theresa May as Tory leader and PM, said in 2015 that he would change, when more clarity becomes available about the airport’s future, as is absolutely right.

Yesterday, Heathrow launched a 12-week consultation into its proposed masterplan for the airport, which includes plans to re-route the M25 west of the existing route and under a new tunnel. Schools and communities face demolition in the plans, including 760 homes in Longford, parts of Harmondsworth, parts of Sipson and at Elbow Meadow in Colnbrook.

Airlines UK welcomed the consultation but said its members were concerned about costs being passed on.

Aerospace body ADS said: “We welcome the consultation process by the airport, but are concerned that the consultation is taking place after the development of the masterplan.”

A spokesperson for Boing said: “We are confident that our submission to the consultation will have an impact on the consultation process.”

The UK’s second-largest airport, which was disrupted before Christmas by a drone that caused widespread delays, posted a 73 per cent rise in earnings before interest, tax, depreciation and amortisation in the year ending 31 March.

However, Gatwick added: “The uncertainty around Brexit, and the future terms of a Brexit, has resulted in lower consumer confidence.”

Johnson said he had “grave reservations” about the project, but dodged when pressed on what his position would be as PM.

The international trade secretary has pledged to strengthen the UK’s ties with Turkey as he attempts to lay the path for a post-Brexit trade deal.

The international trade secretary met his counterpart Rühsar Pekcan in Ankara yesterday to cement the UK’s “historic bond” with Turkey.

Striking a post-Brexit trade deal with Turkey will be tricky as it’s customs union relationship with the EU does not cover all of its economy.

Fox called for a separate deal to be done between the UK and Turkey, outside of any agreement between London and Brussels.

Turkey’s economy has proved volatile since the failed coup on July 15 last year, with President Recep Tayyip Erdogan clamping down on press freedom and political opponents and central bank independence.

Retail tycoon Mike Ashley set to hire firm to probe Goals Soccer Centres

THE OWNER of Sports Direct has written to the board of Goals Soccer Centres to demand it hires corporate investigator Kroll to probe accounting issues at the firm, Sky News reported yesterday.

The industry mean IAG will eventually pay around half that amount, the industry mean IAG will eventually pay around half that amount, according to aviation analysts.

The move is still subject to formal agreement. It is a vote of confidence in Boeing, after the controversy and reputational damage that has engulfed it lately. Its 737 Max fleet was grounded globally from March following two deadly crashes. Boeing’s boss apologised for the grounding at the aviation event’s opening day. There is no confirmed date for when the 737 Max fleet will be allowed back in the skies.

The UK’s second-largest airport, which was disrupted before Christmas by a drone that caused widespread delays, posted a 73 per cent rise in earnings before interest, tax, depreciation and amortisation in the year ending 31 March.

The list price is approximately $117m (£93.1m) for the Boeing 737-8 aircraft would be delivered between March following when the 737 Max fleet will be available for delivery. An additional 1.1m long-haul passengers travelled through Gatwick over the last year, driving up passengers to 46.4m annually.

Dividend conflict sinks Old Mutual chief executive

JESS CLARK
@jclarkjourno

OLD MUTUAL sacked chief executive Peter Moyo following a period of suspension due to a conflict of interest related to an investment firm he founded.

The insurer said Moyo’s actions since his suspension in May “contravened his fiduciary duties” to Old Mutual.

“Following unsuccessful attempts to engage on the terms of separation, the board has now resolved to give notice of termination of employment,” the company said.

The conflict of interest related to ordinary dividend payments made by Moyo’s investment firm NMT Capital, in which an Old Mutual subsidiary is the only institutional investor.

Old Mutual said two payments made by NMT Capital last year totalling 115m rand (£6.31m) were a breach of its rights as a preference shareholder. The personal benefit to Moyo and his investment company was 30.6m rand, the insurer said.

Following the discovery the board said “there was a material breakdown in trust” in Moyo.

CVC abandons float plan for Domestic & General after tepid investor response

AUGUST GRAHAM
@AugustGraham

A SLEAGISH response from investors has forced one of Britain’s biggest home appliance insurers to abandon plans for a public float as soon as this month which it hoped would value it at more than £1bn.

Domestic & General has decided in the last few days to shelve the listing, Sky News reported yesterday.

CVC Capital Partners, which is owned by CVC Capital Partners, was reportedly approached by private equity houses for a takeover last month. Centerbridge Partners and Warburg Pincus are reported to be among the suitors. They would have become the third private equity owner of Domestic and General in 10 years.

CVC, reportedly appointed Barclays, Bank of America Merrill Lynch and Credit Suisse to run the float last year. Rothschild was said to be also working on the deal.

CVC has been trying to offload the business, which it took over in 2013. At the time, Domestic & General had sales of around £600m per year. The company started as a livestock insurer in western Australia in the early part of the 20th century. It later moved its headquarters to London. CVC has $69bn (£55bn) assets under management.

Open Banking startups warned over data leak

JESS CLARK
@jclarkjourno

A SINGLE data breach at an Open Banking startup could “fatally” damage the developing sector, Nicky Morgan, chair of the Treasury Select Committee, warned yesterday.

Open Banking, which allows users to view all their financial information in one place, relies on customers providing their data to a third party. Morgan said if the sector is to succeed it will “have to meet the challenge of gaining the trust of their would-be customers”.

“Having rightly been told to never hand over personal banking data to third parties, consumers are extremely reluctant to hand over very sensitive personal data, such as their own spending habits, to third parties, many of which will be relatively new startups that don’t have a track record in handling data of that kind,” she said at a conference run by The City UK.

“Let me at this point offer a warning, it may only take one data breach of financial records from an open banking start up for the entire retail Open Banking proposition to be damaged, perhaps fatally.”

A government-backed Open Banking initiative launched in January last year and has slowly been gaining traction.

On Monday, Lloyds Bank, Halifax and Bank of Scotland were the first to launch an Open Banking app for credit card and savings accounts. Mastercard similarly unveiled its Open Banking solutions earlier this month.

Tory leadership live debate turns sour as contenders vie for airtime

Raab had recruited a formidable team to help run his campaign, including top figures from the Vote Leave campaign, but failed to win the support of key Brexit-backing figures such as Steve Baker and Jacob Rees-Mogg, who are both supporting Johnson.

Stewart, on the other hand, picked up 18 more votes compared to the first ballot, held last Thursday. Two hours after the result was announced, the five remaining candidates took part in a live debate on BBC One – with Johnson making an appearance after snubbing Channel 4’s hustings on Sunday.

The hour-long show frequently descended into farce as the candidates talked over each other. Asked if he was prepared to take the UK out of the EU on 31 October regardless of the state of the negotiations, Johnson replied: “We must come out on the 31 October because otherwise I’m afraid we face a catastrophic loss of confidence in politics. We’ve already kicked the can down the road twice and I think the British people are getting thoroughly fed up.”

Hunt agreed with Gove that the deadline could be extended if a new deal was close to being completed with the EU. Stewart said it was not possible to leave without a deal as parliament would not allow it. As well as Brexit, Stewart clashed with his rivals, who have all promised tax cuts if they were to become Prime Minister, on economic policy.

The next round of voting takes place this afternoon. The candidate with the fewest number of votes will be eliminated, before a further ballot is held tomorrow.

Oil rises as Trump confirms meeting with Chinese President Xi Jinping

AUGUST GRAHAM
@AugustGraham
OIL PRICES rose nearly two per cent yesterday as markets were buoyed by hopes of an ease in US-China tensions.

Markets turned upwards after US President Donald Trump said he was expecting to hold an “extended” meeting with his Chinese counterpart Xi Jinping later this month at a meeting of the Group of 20 nations in France.

“Had a very good telephone conversation with President Xi of China,” Trump tweeted yesterday.

The countries are now working on arrangements, the President said.

“Right now, this is a rumoured-driven market,” said Gene McMillian, vice president of market research at Tradition Energy. “There’s the expectation that if you are able to reach a trade resolution, it would help global economic growth.”

Prices were also propped up by Middle East tensions, after two oil tankers were hit by attacks last week.

The US said this week that it plans to send a further 1,000 troops to the Middle East to counter the perceived threat from Iran.

Fracking piles pressure on fuel prices as US nears a new record

AUGUST GRAHAM
@AugustGraham
US SHALE oil production is expected to hit record levels in July, authorities have said, as domestic production continues to weigh on global prices.

The output from the country’s seven major shale formations will rise by 70,000 barrels per day.

It will push up production to 8.52m barrels per day, the Energy Information Administration (EIA) said in its monthly report.

The biggest change is in the Permian basin, which stretches across Texas and New Mexico. Output there will rise by 55,000 barrels to more than 4.2 barrels per day in July.

Oil markets have grappled with downward pressure on prices over the past six months. The drop, which has been largely driven by the increase in US shale, caused oil cartel Opec to slash its output.

The cartel’s 1.2 barrels per day output cut seemed to have the desired effect in the first few months of the year.

UK is reliant on ‘flighty’ capital, says BoE official

HARRY ROBERTSON
@henrygrobertson
A BANK of England (BoE) official yesterday warned that since the Brexit referendum in 2016 Britain’s economy has become vulnerable to foreign money being withdrawn at short notice.

Anil Kashyap, a member of the Bank’s financial policy committee (FPC), also warned that cyber attacks posed a threat to the UK’s financial stability.

Kashyap’s warnings were published in a written statement to parliament’s Treasury Select Committee, which was scrutinising his reappointment to his BoE post.

The pound yesterday hit a fresh 2019 low as former foreign secretary Boris Johnson’s leadership campaign went from strength to strength – ramping up the chances of a no-deal Brexit. It demonstrated unease in global markets at Britain’s trajectory.

Britain has a significant current account deficit, meaning more money leaves the country for things like goods, services and investment payments than comes in.

The UK relies on foreign investments in finance and in companies to pay for the deficit.

Kashyap said he thought “a current account deficit is not necessarily a problem per se...”

However, he did worry about the composition of the foreign capital that the UK relies on. Right now the stock of foreign funding is potentially more flighty than it was in 2016.

“To the extent that some of this flighty funding is going to the financial system and could be withdrawn at short notice this could create cause for concern,” he said in his written statement to the Committee.

Kashyap said: “I also worry about cyber risks a lot, in part because breaches are inevitable.”

He said the BoE was carrying out a “pilot stress exercise” to monitor cyber risks.

“A disorderly Brexit still represents one of the most significant financial stability risks to the economy,” Kashyap said.

He added that “risks emanating from the situation in Italy” were “a worry”.

Ashtead raises payout after US trading success

JOE CURTIS
@joe_r_curtis

ASHTEAD hiked its dividend yesterday after posting a 20 per cent rise in full-year profit thanks to a strong performance in the US.
The UK equipment rental company raised its final dividend to 33.5p per share, bringing its total dividend for the year to 40p, 21 per cent higher than 2018’s 33p.
Revenue rose 19 per cent year on year to £4.5bn for the year to the end of April. Meanwhile profit before tax grew 20 per cent to break through the billion-pound barrier at £1.06bn, up from last year’s £862m.
However, earnings per share fell 17 per cent year on year to 166.1p after Trump’s tax cut bolstered last year’s 195.3p figure.
The US Sunbelt business drove Ashtead’s growth, reporting rental sales growth 22 per cent of £3.5bn.
Meanwhile revenue from Ashtead’s UK A-plant division grew 2.7 per cent to £416m, while its Sunbelt Canada business posted a 54 per cent rise in revenue to £167m.
Analysts at Liberum said: “The market should be relieved that growth has continued without interruption in the fourth quarter, with management expressing confidence in end markets in the US now and into the medium term.
“The shares still look cheap, having only recovered half of the macro-driven sell-off of late 2018.”
Boss Brendan Horgan said: “With our business performing well and a strong balance sheet to support our plans, the board continues to look to the medium term with confidence.”

Barrick Gold gets more time to make firm offer for Acacia Mining

ARUNDHATI SARKAR
GOLD miner Acacia Mining yesterday agreed to extend the deadline for Canadian miner Barrick Gold to make a firm offer for taking full control of the company.
Barrick spun off Acacia into a separate company in 2010, but owns 63.9 per cent of the miner, which has three mines in Tanzania.
It proposed to takeover Acacia last month in a deal that valued it at $787m (£627m), nearly an 11 per cent discount to its closing price before the offer.
Barrick said yesterday that Acacia’s ongoing dispute with the Tanzanian government has made it impossible for the miner to function as an independent public company.
Tesco shares jump as it prepares to hike margin beyond previous goal

JAMES BOOTH

TESCO’s share price rose 3.7 per cent yesterday after it told investors it would try and boost its profit margin beyond previously announced targets.

Its management described initiatives to achieve efficiency savings and grow revenue, including reducing costs, optimising space and growing profitable categories in its larger stores while trimming its offering in smaller stores.

Presentation slides also showed a new higher-end store concept with the “Tesco finest” banner. Tesco added it was well placed to grow in Thailand, where it sees an opportunity for 750 new stores over the “medium term”.

Tesco boss Dave Lewis said it was on track to meet the turnaround goals it set in 2016 after an accounting scandal. This included a key margin target of earning up to 4p of operating profit for every pound spent by the end of its 2019-20 financial year.

“We have the further cost reduction and mix opportunities that allow us to offset inflation, improve our customer offer and/or increase margin,” Tesco said. Its management described initiatives to achieve efficiency, improvement of earning up to 4p of operating profit for every pound spent by the end of its 2019-20 financial year.

At a capital markets day for analysts and investors yesterday, Tesco boss Dave Lewis said it had met, or would soon meet, most of the turnaround goals set in 2016 beyond previously announced targets.

Safestore boost as sector shows it can shrug off uncertain times

SEBASTIAN McCARTHY

SELF-STORAGE company Safestore enjoyed an earnings boost in the first half of the year as occupancy rates rose in its UK and Parisian stores. However, profit fell more than 50 per cent due to a reduced gain on its investment properties.

Safestore reported pre-tax profit of £38.2m in the six months to the end of April, 53 per cent down on the same period the previous year. Since the company launched an acquisition and development programme in 2016, it has added 38 stores to its business, including five still in the pipeline.

Chief executive Frederic Vecchioli said: “Safestore’s performance has been robust in the first half of the year and continues to build on the strong earnings and dividend growth achieved over the last five years.”

He added: “The self-storage market remains resilient to macroeconomic uncertainty and we continue to capture growing levels of demand in the UK and in Paris.”

Food sales set to grow amid rise of discounters

SEBASTIAN McCARTHY

THE UK’s food and grocery sector is expected to grow by more than £24bn during the next five years, with online and discount firms set to eat up an increasing share of the market.

New forecasts from research organisation IGD predict the industry is anticipated to grow more than any other channels in the sector over the next five years, with their estimated worth set to increase by 40 per cent from £24.1bn, by 2024, bringing the market to a total value of £217.7bn.

Discounters and online firms are set to contribute £4 in every £10 of cash contribution to market growth will be from discounters, which are expected to grow by more than £24bn during the next five years, as the likes of German firms Aldi and Lidl are set to contribute £4 in every £10 of growth over the next five years, as the likes of German firms Aldi and Lidl are set to be a dominant force in the sector.

Earlier this month, Lidl revealed plans to invest more than £500m in London, through opening 40 new outlets in the capital over the course of the next five years.

According to recent Kantar data, Aldi and Lidl are worth £344m more than they were this time last year.

Wainwright added: “With many food discount shoppers now perceiving Aldi and Lidl as supermarkets rather than discounters, and more targeted investments in categories such as fresh produce, meat, bakery and beauty, the channel will continue to experience notable growth.”

IDENTITY fraud reached a record high last year as criminals targeted children as young as 11 to launder money, it was revealed yesterday.

Criminals targeted younger people and pensioners, the UK’s fraud prevention service Cifas said in its annual report.

The figures showed more than 189,000 fraud cases were reported last year, with plastic card fraud proving the most common.

Cases involving money mules – people allowing their accounts to be accessed to move around illegal funds to launder money – soared 26 per cent, the research found.

Separate research published by Barclays yesterday showed that fraudsters were increasingly targeting those under age of 16 to become money mules.

It found that the number of money mules under 16 has increased 137 per cent last year with children as young as 11 being used by criminal gangs.

Head of digital safety at Barclays Ross Martin said: “Children as young as 11 are unwittingly becoming money mules.

The Cifas study also highlighted an “alarming” 34 per cent rise in over-60s being used as money mules, suggesting the problem wasn’t limited to younger generations.

Earlier this year, UK Finance chief executive Stephen Jones warned fraudsters were using Facebook and Instagram to target millennials and children who are “overly trusting” of social media.

James Emmanuel

ALPHABET’s Google yesterday announced an additional $1bn (€796.4m) investment in housing across the San Francisco Bay Area.

Google said over the next 10 years, it would re-purpose at least 576m of its land, most of which is currently zoned for office or commercial space, as residential housing.

This will enable us to support the development of at least 15,000 new homes at all income levels in the Bay Area,” the firm said.

Space X blast will push back astronaut plans

JAMES BOOTH
@Jamesbooth

THE EXPLOSION that destroyed a Space X crew vehicle in April will delay the drive to build a US spaceship able to carry astronauts to the International Space Station, a senior Nasa official said yesterday.

Nasa administrator Jim Bridenstine said he had “no doubt” the explosion would push back the timeline for the multi-billion-dollar Commercial Crew Program.

“There is no doubt the schedule will change,” Bridenstine told reporters at the Paris Airshow. “It won’t be what was originally planned.”

His comments cast doubt on Space X billionaire boss Elon Musk’s plans to return astronauts to the space station from US soil this year.

Space X and Boeing have been awarded $6.8bn (£5.4bn) by Nasa to develop vehicles able to carry crew members to the International Space Station.

Since the retirement of the space shuttle in 2011 the US has relied on Russian launch vehicles to carry its astronauts to the International Space Station.

Boeing has also delayed its own flights for months.

Space X originally planned its first flight in July, following a successful six-day unflown mission in March.

Space X did not respond to requests for comment.
Metro Bank staff back their boss in most popular chief executive list

CALLUM KEOWN
@CallumKeown2

METRO Bank staff have backed their boss Craig Donaldson in a list of the UK’s most popular chief executives. Although Metro Bank’s tough start to the year, chief executive Donaldson came third in recruitment firm Glassdoor’s top 30 chief executives (CEOs) list with a 98 per cent approval rating from employees.

Water company Anglian Water’s chief executive Peter Simpson topped the table with a 99 per cent approval rating from his staff. Anglian Water was also recently awarded the industry top prize; water company of the year.

Donaldson offered to step down earlier this year after the bank admitted that a swathe of commercial loans had been wrongly classified and should have been among its risk-weighted assets. But the board refused his resignation, backing him to continue and steady the ship through a successful £375m capital raise last year. The bank’s boss Andrew Haines, who replaced Mark Carne in May 2018, was second, also with a 98 per cent score.

Just two women made the list – water company Severn Trent’s boss Liv Garfield in 40th and car hire firm Enterprise’s Pam Nicholson in 41st place – down from sixth in 2018. Bloomberg’s Michael Bloomberg was fourth, while Siemens boss Jürgen Maier was fifth.

Short-termist Adland outlook draws criticism

JAMES WARRINGTON

THE ADVERTISING industry is suffering a crisis in creativity as both brands and industry awards pursue short-term goals, the report stated.

In the Institute of Practitioners in Advertising (IPA) has warned creativity no longer translates into effective marketing, with award-winning creative campaigns now at their lowest levels of effectiveness in more than 20 years.

The research, which measured effectiveness through market share gain, returned the collapse in efficiency was down to a growing trend of short-termism, as brands seek instant gratification rather than a more balanced approach to long and short-term goals.

“Despite our warnings, the misuse of creativity has continued to grow and the effectiveness advantage has continued to decline,” said marketing effectiveness expert and report author Peter Field.

“We cannot afford to go on being complacent; left unchecked, the catastrophic decline in creative effectiveness will ultimately weaken support for creativity amongst general management.”

The report urged advertisers to adopt a more balanced approach to long and short-term targets, and to maintain their campaigns in the market for a longer period of time.

It also called for broader, earlier targeting of consumers, rather than data-driven campaigns that focused on driving consumers to make purchases.

The report called for the industry to change the way it rewards creativity, with separate classes of awards for long and short-termism.

IPA director of marketing strategy Janet Hull said: “Just as in the wider industry, it is often shunned in favour of more tangible metrics.

The trend has also been exacerbated by a tendency for industry awards to celebrate campaigns that pursue short-term goals, the report stated.

New powers to stop consumer loyalty penalty

By Callum Keown @CallumKeown

The competition watchdog is set to boost consumer powers with new powers to penalise firms without going through the courts.

It comes after consumer body Citizens Advice lodged a so-called super complaint regarding loyalty penalties in the mobile phone, broadband, mortgages and insurance markets, and the exploitation of customers.

The CMA in turn proposed the crackdown and the government launched a consultation on the new powers yesterday.

The government said the powers would act as a “powerful deterrent” to companies harming consumers with misleading claims, unfair terms and conditions and hard-to-exit contracts.

Business secretary Greg Clark said: “I strongly believe that consumer loyalty should not be exploited and nor should consumers have to work so hard to get a fair deal.”

Other regulators such as Ofcom and the Financial Conduct Authority could also be given new powers to tackle the issue.

For far too long, many big companies have been getting away with harmful trading practices which lead to poor services and confusion among customers who have parted with their hard-earned cash,” Prime Minister Theresa May said.

Head of regulation at Uswitch Richard Neudegg said: “Providing the regulators with greater fining powers would strengthen consumer law across all industries, and fire a warning shot across the bows of companies who try to bamboozle their customers.”

Thousands hit by South Western industrial action at Waterloo

By Joe Curtis @joe_c_curtis

Commuters faced the first of five days of disruption as a South Western Railway (SWR) strike hit trains to and from Waterloo station yesterday.

Passengers will face rush-hour chaos for the rest of the week and into the weekend on the route, after workers with the Rail, Maritime and Transport Union (RMT) walked out over a long-running dispute.

SWR warned a reduced service will affect most of its network, while “some routes will not have a train service or a replacement bus service”.

A spokesperson slammed the timing of the five-day strike, which coincides with both Royal Ascot and Hampton Court Palace Music Festival.

RMT claimed yesterday it was “left with no choice” but to strike due to SWR’s stance over a dispute about its decision to reduce the number of guards on SWR trains.

Commitment to a unique investment methodology has proved very successful for the manager

We regard continued outperformance of the fund as justification for the extra fees, which should reduce as fund grows. The Buffettology fund would nicely complement a core UK equity all-companies fund or tracker fund. High portfolio concentration and a bias to smaller-companies means it is slightly riskier, but as a better asset holding in a well-diversified portfolio.

It is also worth noting that the 10-year licence to use the Buffettology trademark in the UK and Ireland expires in 2021. If Buffett agrees, Ashworth-Lord may renew the licence. However, the cost involved might mean the fund is renamed.

This article is provided for information purposes only and is not intended to be a personal recommendation by or sell any financial instrument or product, or to adopt any investment strategy.

UK BUFFETTOLGY FUND

Dmitry Lipski is an investment analyst at interactive investor

£21.1 billion, or £8.6 billion excluding Berkshire Hathaway. The median is £1.2 billion.

The fund does not have a sector limit and the sector exposure is a result of the bottom-up stock selection. Preference is given to companies that are usually not correlated within sectors and the fund avoids banks, energy and mining and ‘blue sky’ pharma. The portfolio is well diversified in terms of earnings exposure: UK 31%, Europe 16%, America 27%, Asia-Pacific 5%, and Rest of the World 8%.

Commitment to a unique investment methodology has proved very successful for the manager. The fund has seen its assets grow rapidly, reaching £872.2 million at the end of May. It had just £42 million under management in mid-2016. The fund has the highest risk-adjusted returns in the IA UK All Companies sector since launch and was able to achieve a positive return in 2018 when other markets fell. Long-term performance has been impressive despite its relatively high ongoing charge of 1.23%. It has generated positive returns every calendar year from 2012, and has delivered high returns with lower volatility, demonstrating a low correlation to other funds in the sector.

UK Buffettology Fund is a UK Equities Adventurous recommendation within the Interactive Investor Super 60 list of high-conviction active and passive funds.

FTSE 100 enjoys best day in four months on ECB

The main stock index recorded its best one-day gain in more than four months yesterday as a promise of more stimulus if required from European Central Bank (ECB) chief Mario Draghi lifted UK shares across sectors.

The FTSE 100 index ended 1.2 per cent higher, after having earlier touched levels not seen in two months, and the FTSE 250 midcap index added 0.8 per cent after Draghi said the ECB would need to ease policy again if inflation did not head higher.

After falling for the first month this year in May and with yesterday’s gains, the FTSE 100 is on course for its biggest rise in 14 months on growing hopes of more official moves to help growth after a period of turbulence over US-China trade tensions.

Tool hire firm Ashtead was the biggest blue-chip gainer after its 2019 revenue surpassed analysts’ expectations. The stock jumped 6.1 per cent on its best day in over two-and-a-half years.

Tesco rose 3.7 per cent after it said it was targeting further margin improvements beyond the end of its current recovery plan.

Drugmaker Astrazeneca was the biggest boost after its cancer medicine Lynparza was approved as a first-line maintenance treatment for a type of advanced ovarian cancer by the European Commission.

Oil majors and miners also played their part in bolstering the index after the US said it would hold an extensive meeting with China at the G20 summit later this month.

An index of mining stocks climbed 2.5 per cent, its best in nearly five months, as a key mine in Chile halved output due to a strike, pushing copper prices higher.

Kier Group surged 11 per cent after steep falls in the previous session when it announced plans to sell businesses, suspended its dividend and said it would cut hundreds of jobs.

Capital & Counties Properties advanced five per cent after reports that Canary Wharf Group was in preliminary talks to buy most of its stake in Earls Court.

TOP RISERS

1. Ashtead Group Up 6.09 per cent
2. Antofagasta Up 4.74 per cent
3. DS Smith Up 3.95 per cent

TOP FALLERS

1. Imperial Brands Down 2.48 per cent
2. Whitbread Down 1.52 per cent
3. Fulian Down 1.38 per cent

BEST OF THE BROKERS

ASTRAZENECA

It may sound like a rude word, but Astrazeneca’s Parp-inhibitor proved a boon for the company yesterday. The company rose 2.5 per cent to 6,410p as the European Commission approved the Lynparza inhibitor to be used in the EU. It comes after US approval last year. The approval of the drug, which helps treat cancer, came as analysts at Deutsche Bank maintained a “buy” rating on the company’s shares. Even with yesterday’s rise, the company is still undervalued according to the analysts, who have put a 6,800p target price on the shares.

SAFESTORE

It markets itself as a safe storage place for your possessions, but is it for your money as well? Analysts at Peel Hunt are positive, but not entirely jubilant about Safestore. While they raised their target price for the self-storage firm by 50p to 625p yesterday, they maintained a “hold” rating on the shares. It comes after “robust” interim results from the company, as like-for-like revenues grew nearly six per cent and adjusted earnings per share rose by seven per cent. “Safestore continues to look good value,” the analysts said.

SERCO

Reports emerged over the weekend that Serco had approached its rival Babcock over a potential tie-up that would create a £4bn outsourcing giant. “Sector consolidation is often discussed given headwinds, but since 2013 mergers and acquisitions have been more focused on non-core disposals,” said analyst at UBS. “Any Serco-Babcock merger would be both unexpected and transform the industry.” Although the deal was rejected by Babcock, UBS increased its target price to 140p, with a “buy” rating on the shares.

NEW YORK REPORT

Wall St nears record as trade mood lightens

Wall Street surged yesterday and the S&P 500 approached record highs after Washington rekindled trade talks with Beijing, boosting sentiment along with growing investor confidence that the Fed will cut interest rates this year.

US President Donald Trump said he would meet with Chinese President Xi Jinping at the G20 summit later this month, and said talks between the two countries would restart after a recent lull.

Global stock markets have rallied amid repeated recent months in reaction to comments from Trump about progress – or lack of progress – in negotiating an end to the trade conflict. Trump’s statement yesterday pushed trade-sensitive industrials up 1.9 per cent and technology stocks gained 1.7 per cent.

Together, they were the biggest boost to the benchmark index.

Chip companies, which have a sizable revenue exposure to China, led the rally in tech stocks, with the Philadelphia Semiconductor index up 4.7 per cent.

The Fed is widely expected to lower interest rates unchanged at its two-day policy meeting that ends today, while laying the foundation for a cut later this year. The Fed is scheduled to release its statement at 7pm tonight, and chairman Jerome Powell will hold a press conference shortly after.

The S&P 500 has gained six per cent so far this month, and is only about one per cent from the all-time high hit in early May.

The Dow Jones Industrial Average jumped 1.36 per cent to end at 26,465.54 points, while the S&P 500 gained 0.97 per cent to 2,917.75.

The Nasdaq Composite surged 1.39 per cent to 7,953.81.

Comments by European Central Bank president Mario Draghi indicating the possibility of fresh rate cuts or asset purchases also lifted sentiment.

Apple, Amazon and Microsoft rose between 0.8 per cent and 2.4 per cent, with the tech triumvirate contributing more than any other stocks to increases in the S&P 500 and Nasdaq.

DRAPER & DASH

Healthcare data analytics innovator Draper & Dash announces the appointment of an experienced ex-pharmaceutical industry specialist Natalie Douglas as non-executive director to drive its ambitions to transform how medicines are deployed for the benefit of patients, physicians and hospitals.

Natalie started her career at Johnson & Johnson, before demonstrating her capability to define new markets with specialist pharmaceutical firm IQIS.

During this time Natalie headed a private equity backed management buyout, becoming chief executive officer and creating significant value for shareholders, eventually selling the business for more than £200m. Her reputation was boosted further when recruited as chief executive for Healthcare at Home to rebuild the company’s operational capability and strengthen its relationship with the NHS. She now advises and invests in healthcare and technology companies across Europe and the US as a chair and non-executive director.

OMNICOM MEDIA

Dan Clays has been appointed as chief executive officer (CEO) of Omnicom Media Group UK. Dan succeeds Philippa Brown, who was recently named CEO of PHD Worldwide. Dan’s previous role was OMD UK CEO. Dan will assume responsibility for the collective success of OMD UK clients and agencies: OMD UK, MG OMD, PHD and Hearts & Science as well as for Specialist Services Annalogue, OMD Programmatic, Fuse, Drum, OMD Ethnic and Benchmarking. Since joining OMD UK and the OMD UK board seven years ago, first as managing director and since 2014 as CEO, Dan has overseen one of the most successful periods in OMD UK’s history, with over £200m of new business wins in the last 18 months. Concurrently, Tim Pearson, CEO of Manning Gottlieb OMD (MGO OMD), becomes CEO of OMD Group UK, with oversight of the separate leadership teams of OMD UK and Manning Gottlieb OMD. Tim has been at Manning Gottlieb OMD for 20 years, becoming CEO in 2015.

PALM CAPITAL

Palm Capital, the pan-European real estate private equity specialist, has appointed Gabriel Rudert as a director to head up its European asset management activities. Gabriel joins from GreenOak, where he was a principal, focusing on asset management across Europe for the last eight years. Prior to that, he spent three years at CIT Property Investors, where he was an asset manager for its pan-European fund. He started his career in asset management at Archon Group (a Goldman Sachs Company) working across the US, Italy and France.
I'm open-minded about who builds and homes-for-the-many challenge. But to deal with our chronic housing deficit, all of the candidates need to think on a much bigger scale. Rather than trying to purely solve the housing crisis, the government should make these part-pension funds, and other major land-owners.

Post-Brexit reforms to the procurement rules should make these part-public, part-private corporations easier to create. They could also lead to an allocation of land to a variety of different tenures – build-to-sell, build-to-rent, and council – to ensure that local needs, rather than just build-to-sell profit, govern the building and release of housing.

These joint ventures would give councils successful house-building programmes, so we know how that can be done.

However, we also know that money is short and that the state cannot do this alone. I suggest “Council Housing 2.0” as part of the solution to these constraints. Council Housing 2.0 would be built and owned by giant, long-term building programmes, so we know how to do this. But we would also need to ensure the central government step in and realise a network of new construction col-laborative relationships and trust, and when there’s no trust, the only thing you can guarantee. However, the oil price rise transferred, in the short term, income from the oil price rise to #Brexit. If ending a 40-year relationship with the EU is tricky as it has been, how much, much trickier will it be to end a 30-year partnership?@amontie

This is the crux of the matter. We don’t yet know which of these things is more compelling:

1. Brexit is an exemplary fiasco that makes independence too risky, too difficult.
2. Europe is such a fiasco that independence is the only way of escaping it.

While Facebook’s Libra doesn’t compete against any open, public permissionless, borderless, neutral, central bank-backed blockchain, it “will” compete against both retail banks and central banks. This is going to be fun to watch. @astanopap

Bruce Dear is head of London real estate at Everards Sutherland. Before jumping ship, though, it seems we were actually here before, in 1973/74. Then, Opec flexed its muscles and the oil price rose four-fold. Today, that is nearing the level of oil price rise to #Brexit. This is the crux of the matter. We don’t yet know which of these things is more compelling:

1. Brexit is an exemplary fiasco that makes independence too risky, too difficult.
2. Europe is such a fiasco that independence is the only way of escaping it.

While Facebook’s Libra doesn’t compete against any open, public permissionless, borderless, neutral, central bank-backed blockchain, it “will” compete against both retail banks and central banks. This is going to be fun to watch. @astanopap

Libra is wrong. Anyone using Libra is doing something wrong and its developers were wrong to build it. The Bretton Woods agreement of 1944 imposed fixed exchange rates on the western world. Devaluations were few and far between, and countries were expected to focus their monetary policies on stabilising the exchange rate.

When President Richard Nixon terminated the convertibility of the US dollar to gold in 1971, it was a fixed price of $35 an ounce.

There are parallels in the world of today. The long-standing trend towards freer trade, for example, has been brought into question. One of the characters in the popular American comic strip Doonesbury once described the 1970s as a “kiddie stone of a decade.”

The experience of the UK certainly mirrors that of Doonesbury’s characters. Inflation soared to more than 20 per cent. Unemployment trebled, to the then incredible level of over a million. Strikes plagued the economy. The nationalised industries were worse than useless. It could easily take six months for the state-controlled telephone company to install a landline.

This is the decade in which Jeremy Corbyn’s ideas were formed. He bathes in its rosy glow with fond nostalgia. But if the conflict escalated and oil prices really did go through the roof?

The 1973 attacks in the Gulf of Oman have raised pressure already existed. The inflation rate in 1973, prior to the oil price increase, was eight per cent in the UK and seven per cent even in Germany. Ted Heath had approved a scheme – which seemed lunatic at the time – that wages would rise, not every year, but every month in line with prices. Rapidly rising inflation was built into the system.

The oil price rise transferred, in the short term, income from the oil price rise to #Brexit. If ending a 40-year relationship with the EU is tricky as it has been, how much, much trickier will it be to end a 30-year partnership?@amontie

Global banks are leading the charge to decarbonise shipping

Adair Turner

T IS sadly rare to see participants from across the world collaborate to achieve a common and worthy aim, and rarer still to see such collaboration driven by the private sector. But when it comes to tackling climate change, such global collaboration has never been more vital.

That makes the Poseidon Principles particularly welcome. This is a new initiative of 11 banks (Citigroup, Société Générale, DNB, ABN Amro, Amsterdam Trade Bank, Credit Agricole CIB, Danish Ship Finance, Danske Bank, ING and Nordea), which aims to address this most pressing global challenge: how to decarbonise our economies while still supporting growth and prosperity.

To limit global warming to well below two degrees Celsius, the world must reach net-zero CO2 emissions by mid-century. Huge attention has been focused on the decarbonisation of electricity generation and how to foster rapid growth of renewables. But by contrast, there has until recently been less focus on how to reduce emissions from sectors such as cement, steel, aviation, and maritime shipping.

One of the most challenging of these sectors, maritime shipping, currently represents two to three per cent of CO2 emissions, according to the UN’s International Maritime Organisation (IMO). Left unchecked, shipping emissions are expected to grow by 50-250 per cent by 2050, putting the sector on track to become a major contributor to climate change.

Fortunately, there is hope. In the 2018 Energy Transition Commission’s Mission Possible report, we showed how well their shipping business aligns with climate change goals. These principles can be used by any lender, lessor, or guarantor providing financial services for shipping. They establish a simple, robust, and verifiable way to measure the climate alignment of financial institutions’ shipping portfolios.

Financial institutions that have signed to the Poseidon Principles will annually assess whether the ships they finance are compatible with the IMO’s climate target of reducing emissions by at least 50 per cent by 2050. This will help change how financial institutions assess clients and projects and set expectations for decarbonisation plans in the short and long term.

And that’s good news, because the newbuild vessels financed today may be a major contributor to climate change.

The effectiveness of the Poseidon Principles depends on the policy decisions and targets set by governments at the IMO, ensuring that finance flows to those that are most clearly pursuing decarbonisation.

The Poseidon Principles may therefore establish a model that could be applied in other sectors. It is vital for financial institutions to support investment in new activities which are essential to a zero-carbon economy, such as renewable energy. But they also need to play a proactive role in aligning all of their financing activity across multiple sectors with climate change-related goals.

Adair Turner is chair of the Energy Transitions Commission, and a senior fellow at the Institute for New Economic Thinking.

Left unchecked, the sector is on track to be a major contributor to climate change

With the launch of KFC’s vegan burger, is it smart for fast-food brands to move into veganism?

It was only a matter of time before fast-food giants joined in the vegan revolution. But KFC or Burger King introducing a vegan menu isn’t the same as, say, Pret doing so.

The very nature of fast-food, and the unethical way it is produced, is antithetical to veganism. That’s why it’s fast and cheap. People know this, but most eat it anyway. Committed customers never have qualms. A vegan option doesn’t stop the suffering of the animals farmed for the non-vegan menu, which is the whole point of veganism. True vegans won’t take a second look at a place that still sells battery-farmed chickens just because now there’s tofu too.

In the short term, this move may draw preparation to branding) is sound, authentic, and reflective of the ethics implied by the vegan label. The world is moving at pace, and attitudes are changing just as fast. This has never been truer than with food – and those brands that can integrate a vegan offer as a choice, not a substitute, will win.

in those for whom veganism is a fad or statement rather than an ideological cause. But to win committed vegans, chains will have to change their meat production methods entirely. That would cost much more than these ethically-minded customers would ever bring in. As it is, this move is hypocritical, and a waste of money.

F YOU’VE ever endeavoured to compare fees charged by pension providers, you’re probably sat wild-eyed, rocking yourself back and forth.

Despite the push to rid the financial sector of opaque and confusing charging structures, it’s still incredibly difficult for consumers to compare the fees levied by pension providers.

Not only can it be difficult to find fee information, but charging structures can vary dramatically, making it hard to compare like-for-like. While most providers simply levy a flat percentage of the pension fund on an annual basis, others have a monthly admin fee – sometimes in pounds rather than a percentage – in addition to the annual management charge (AMC), and some providers like Nest levy a charge on all contributions on top of an annual fee.

It gets even more complicated with workplace pension schemes, where the fees will depend on factors such as the number of employees joining the scheme, the level of funds under management, and the investment choices made by the employer.

It’s no wonder that the vast majority of people just sigh and get on with it, potentially allowing their pension pots to be eroded by unnecessarily high fees.

AS CLEAR AS MUD

While the difference of a percentage point might not sound like a lot, in reality these charges can make tens of thousands of pounds of difference to your savings. For example, figures from The Lang Cat show that an investment worth £100,000 with an annual return of six per cent and a fee of one per cent will grow to £432,194 after 30 years, while a fee of two per cent would leave you with £324,340 over the same period. You would essentially take a cut of £107,000 (or 25 per cent) if you remained with the fund charging the higher fees.

Now consider that PensionBee told us that it still sees AMCs of up to five per cent for some private pensions.

When City A.M looked at the recent Independent Governance Committee (IGC) reports published by some of the UK’s largest pension providers, many had either already imposed one per cent annual fee caps across their fund options or at least intended to. Others simply said that they are frequently reviewing their charges to make sure that they are in line with objectives.

Broadly speaking, fees do appear to have fallen over the years, largely driven by the 0.75 per cent fee cap on default funds in workplace pension schemes, which came into force in April 2015.

It’s a competitive market, so many providers are lowering their fees further – for example, average annual fees for workplace pension schemes offered by Aviva, Scottish Widows, and Royal London are between 0.45 and 0.5 per cent. This compares favourably with the Department for Work and Pensions’ national average of 0.54 per cent.

But even though this 0.75 per cent threshold sounds relatively simple, you start getting into murky water when you find out some providers charge more for “older” default funds – that is, those funds that were launched before the cap was introduced. Indeed, while Scottish Widows charges an average of 0.48 per cent for its “modern” default funds, this jumps to an average of 0.87 per cent for its “older” default funds, according to its 2018 IGC report.

The Financial Conduct Authority (FCA) told City A.M. that policyholders have to expressly agree to remain in the original fund under the higher charges. If they don’t, consumers...
Savova argues that exit fees should be charged to those who are nearing retirement.

People with smaller pension pots or who want to move to a better value option could be asked to foot an expensive exit fee too.

When asked to respond, a spokesperson for Scottish Widows said: “Many of our pension schemes have bespoke charging structures which makes it difficult to display accurate information in a meaningful way for each and every customer within their statement. We are, however, constantly looking at and investing in our technology to help us to do this, and are working on including this type of information in future statements.”

“In the meantime, the best way for us to support our customers with regards to understanding their charges is for them to speak directly to one of our customer service advisers, at which point we will be more than happy to explain the charges relating to a specific policy.”

This is just one example. However, it’s worrying that this is even an issue given that investment charges have been in the regulatory spotlight over recent years. The FCA is currently reviewing how companies disclose costs to workplace pension scheme members.

The era of hidden charges should be brought to an end as soon as possible

Meanwhile, last month, the Pension Charges Bill, which calls for greater transparency and an extension of the 0.75 per cent cap to all defined contribution pension schemes, was granted a second reading in the House of Commons.

When asked if this was the right answer to the fee conundrum, former pensions minister and director of policy at Royal London, Steve Webb, argued that a blanket cap may not be the best solution. He points out that some pensions and drawdown accounts are likely to be tailored to individual needs, and therefore could justify a slightly higher fee.

“However, those who wish to charge more need to be clear about what they are charging, and demonstrate what additional benefit they are delivering to consumers,” he says. “The era of hidden or obscure charges should be brought to an end as soon as possible.”

And it’s not just the AMC and admin fees that you could be looking for. If you want to move to a better value provider, you could be asked to foot an expensive exit fee too.

Romi Savova, chief executive of PensionBee, says exit fees are present in just four per cent of all pensions. Savova says she is drawing to an end as soon as possible. She warns that these charges can be large, and particularly detrimental to people with smaller pension pots or those who are nearing retirement.

Savova argues that exit fees should be banned: “We believe that these charges undermine consumer confidence in the pensions industry, and deter people from switching when it may be in their best interests to do so.”

CHARGING AHEAD

So what should you expect to pay?

Unless providers can justify the extra cost to their customers and provide a higher level of service or performance, Savova says you shouldn’t be charged more than one per cent overall. “The industry has made some progress on fee transparency, but more work needs to be undertaken to present charges in a comparable manner in percentage and pounds,” she says. “Overall, we still find that many consumers are not aware that their pensions have fees. And until we can raise awareness of pension fees, we will struggle to create a competitive market from a consumer standpoint.”

Joe Dabrowski from the Pensions and Lifetime Savings Association notes that action is being taken to improve transparency, pointing to last month’s launch of the Cost Transparency Initiative, which aims to standardise cost reporting across the industry.

Experts often advise that if you can’t easily find or estimate the fees, avoid investing your money with that company.

And if customers will start moving away from companies which aren’t transparent, perhaps the pensions industry will finally get its act together by making their fees clear. It’s either that or we wait for the regulator to throw the rulebook at them.
An introduction to some of the myriad benefits of joining our exclusive Club

BuyAssociation CEO Caroline Marshall-Roberts leads the disruptive, award-winning investment company that specialises in emerging UK property assets. We sit down with her to find out what it’s like being a powerful woman in a historically male-orientated industry.

HOW DID BUYASSOCIATION GET STARTED?
We were founded 14 years ago in London. We began as a content and media business providing property investment advice and related content to property people, investors and partners including AOL, Rightmove, GMTV and the Foreign & Commonwealth Office.

Over time we have evolved to continually strip out the costly layers between investor and developer leading to today’s model whereby we offer our audience the ability to transact directly with developers in key locations and – crucially – at the earliest possible opportunity.

WHY PROPERTY INVESTMENT?
We started out offering advice on all aspects of property ownership.

As the business has evolved, however, we have kept one principle at the forefront of what we do: we listen to the audience. Early on, investment articles and podcasts gained most traction, so we did more of them. We would then get asked to recommend credible agents, or property professionals, and over time our focus has moved to delivering the leanest route for our audience to do business.

Over the last 12 months we raised £800m in funding for various major projects in the North of England, sourcing some of the best property investment opportunities in the market today.

WHY DO YOU JUST FOCUS ON THE NORTH OF ENGLAND?
That’s not strictly true. We go where we feel the market is heading. While our HQ is now in Manchester, the bulk of our UK investor base is from London, with the second largest sector being Far East investors that we service from our Hong Kong office. However, it’s correct that the bulk of the projects are in the many emerging Northern cities: this is simply due to growth.

We will most certainly carry London stock again at some point but right now the audience is rightly targeting the North, which offers huge potential and stronger yields.

LANDLORDS AND DEVELOPERS CAN HAVE A BAD REPUTATION IN THE MEDIA. WHY IS THAT?
While there are some bad players, it’s largely unfounded. It’s a shame, because they are generally a huge force for good. Aside from providing thousands of homes for people, a lot of investment has gone into renovating disused and abandoned buildings, and regenerating run-down parts of towns into communities people would like to live and make a home in. Without this investment, we’d see fewer new homes and less funding for local government.

ARE DEVELOPERS DOING ENOUGH ABOUT AFFORDABLE HOUSING?
The UK needs to build more homes. The market has been outstripping supply for a while, especially in regional city centre locations. I do think more can – and must – be done for affordable housing.

However, it’s a very complex issue and extends beyond developers. What I would say is that it’s great to see the huge level of investment going into building and regenerating our high streets and city centres. Then developers building these new homes will provide quality housing and establish communities. And at the same time, they’ll be increasing supply in the market.

WHERE ARE YOU SEEING MOST GROWTH?
While London has long dominated the property market, we’ve seen huge spikes in interest for investment in regional cities. A lot of investors are now looking North for returns, in regions that we and other industry leaders, such JLL and Savills, feel are really undervalued and continue to show signs of growth. And there’s the huge benefit that many of these cities are at price points much lower than London. And the world is changing – Birmingham is going to be 37 minutes from London by train, so many businesses are moving into the area. And yet compare the price of property in Croydon for instance, which is around 28 minutes into London. Cities such as Manchester, Birmingham, Leeds, Liverpool, Preston and other outer commuter towns are seeing great potential, and they have the huge benefit of price points much lower than equivalent properties in the South. This ultimately leads to better rental yields and less money spent on stamp duty.

HOW HAVE YOU FOUND BEING A WOMAN IN THE PROPERTY INDUSTRY?
Well I’ve never been anything but, so I’ve nothing to compare it to! But it’s a question I’ve had before. The short answer is that it’s great. The market is full of brilliant people and what we do is a little different from the traditional agent; we are an entrepreneurial and agile company, and we’re all about timing and access for the investor. If anything, I guess it helps to exaggerate the point that the market and the way investors do business is changing.

WHAT ARE YOU OFFERING CITY A.M. CLUB MEMBERS?
We offer exclusive deals, and direct access to some of the UK’s top residential developers through our monthly City A.M. Club Member Breakfast Briefings, the first one of which was held in April. It’s a great opportunity to meet us face to face, and to get up to speed on the state of the property market beyond London. If you can’t join us on the day, we’d be happy to book members a free private consultation, or readers can sign up to receive early access to new property developments.

HOW TO JOIN
Booking an annual membership couldn’t be easier.

The City A.M. Club is your passport to the City, giving you access to networking opportunities, events and exclusive offers. City A.M. has collected more than 50 partners, each providing a totally unique, curated experience for City A.M. Club Members. WHO ARE YOU?
I’m a 33-year-old easy-going Italian, born with a passion for food and cooking. I could never imagine being anything other than a chef. My style of cooking is fairly experimental but I still make sure that tradition and culture are respected through my dishes. I like to bring back forgotten ingredients and dishes so that we don’t erase Italy’s diverse gastronomical culture.

TELL US ABOUT YOUR RESTAURANT.
Enoteca Rabezzana highlights Italy’s varied regional cuisines across a menu of small plates, pastas, meats and desserts. Don’t come here for simple pasta dishes, there are too many other Italian places doing that. I love to play around with ingredients, using seasonal vegetables, different cuts of meat or fish and modern techniques to elevate traditional Italian recipes from my childhood into something unique.

WHAT SHOULD EVERYONE HAVE IN THEIR CUPBOARD?
A big mixing bowl. It’s such a necessary piece of equipment for making so many things, especially a good bread or pizza dough.

WHAT’S THE WORST THING YOU’VE EVER PUT IN YOUR MOUTH?
Overcooking food. Cooking pasta and contamination in restaurant kitchens.

WHAT DO YOU COOK?
Biff’s Jack Shack

SPAR, 64 BROOKSBY’S WALK

WHAT?
Vegan food is at the literal bleeding edge of scientific cuisine, but before there were home-sourced burgers, pea protein mince and steaks made of specially cultivated soy chunks pounded into the vague shape of a cow by a man in a lab coat, there was the humble jackfruit. The fusty, stringy, melting flesh of the jackfruit is one of the most versatile things ever to fall out of a tree, and as well as famously making a decent stand-in as pig-friendly pulled pork, it’s also found applications as a meatless alternative to friendly pulled pork, it’s also found

BUT HOW?
It’s a deep fried nugget of jackfruit with a sugar cane stick running through it like a bone, so you can pick it up at both ends and have it with your teeth.

A highlight is the one slathered in buffalo hot sauce, vegan blue cheese and spring onions. Another is the one dripping in a gorgeous, sticky balsamic infused BBQ sauce, but order a flight of them to sample as many varieties as you can.

WHAT’S THE BEST THING ABOUT COOKING?
I could never imagine being anything other than a chef. My style of cooking is fairly experimental but I still make sure that tradition and culture are respected through my dishes.

WHO?
Co-founders Biff Burrows and Christa Bloom started selling filthy vegan burgers out of the back of a van in 2017, before moving into a permanent spot in Shoreditch’s Brickyard a year later, and into Walthamstow and Homerton after that.

WHERE?
It’s a food counter inside a Spar, surprisingly enough. But not just any Spar, a really fancy Spar around the corner from Homerton overground station, where they sell kombucha and lentils by the gram.

ORDER THIS: The Jack Bauer Tower of Power is a tall and greasy conglomerate of two crispy jackfruit patties, deep fried vegan cheese, potato rosti and fake bacon.

Steve Hogarty

WHAT?
“Metamorfosi” from the Michelin-starred Colombian chef Roy Caceres. It was 16 courses, each one better than the last – unbelievable!

WHAT’S THE STRANGEST ENCOUNTER YOU HAVE EVER HAD IN YOUR RESTAURANT?
A customer once came in with a black and white French bulldog. I love dogs and I’m all for dog-friendly restaurants, but the dog was sat on a chair next to the owner as if it was a human being, licking the owner’s plate while she was eating. That’s too much...

Debunking the dropout-hero narrative

We must stop giving the impression that the workplace is pitted against the classroom.

T'OFTEN happens. In meetings, at networking events, or even around dinner tables. “So, where did you go to college, Andrew?” “MIT,” I respond. Naming the Institute usually draws impressed looks. “But I left before graduating to build my own company.”

Choosing not to complete university historically evoked suspicion, even sympathy. But that is not the case today. In many professional circles, dropping out has become intellectually mysterious, even attractive. Certainly in the tech world, saying you didn’t graduate can be as impressive as excellent grades.

This shift in attitudes is due to a handful of iconic dropouts we’ve admired in our lifetime. We saw the likes of Steve Jobs, Bill Gates, Mark Zuckerberg, and Richard Branson all leave traditional education early, before launching world-renowned companies. In the modern era, the media celebrates school dropouts for their bravery. Take the following three headlines from just the last month: “College dropout who founded firm in shed becomes billionaire” (Bloomberg), “These 23 successful tech moguls never graduated college” (Business Insider), and “This High School Dropout Went From...”

We must stop giving the impression that the workplace is pitted against the classroom.

...to $200 Million In Revenue In 12 Months” (Forbes).

While these innovative minds deserve acclaim, we also need to be conscious of this misleading get-rich-quick narrative. Especially at this time of year (when students are sitting exams), celebrating dropout culture can muddy the purpose of learning. It can conflate starting your career with ending your education.

Fawning news articles about dropouts can give the impression that the workplace is pitted directly against the classroom, and that ending education early almost guarantees an advantage in the working world. Finishing school, whether prematurely or not, apparently signifies the moment when your learning stops, and the money-making begins. This is a gross distortion of the reasons why we acquire knowledge, and of the reality of building a successful business. Learning and working have always been complementary.

Look at the dropouts I mentioned earlier. Jobs credits a calligraphy class he took after dropping out of his university for inspiring Apple’s beautiful typography. Zuckerberg has a deep interest in classical language and civilisation, and is learning to speak Mandarin Chinese. Branson is known for exploring new ventures as big as space travel. And Gates’ annual book recommendations allow us to devour the great reads from which he personally learns new things.

This capacity for continually seeking knowledge has helped shape the companies we now recognise as household names. I taught myself how to code on computers in my teenage years and started a company before completing college. But I also continue to invest in myself, from studying machine learning and French, to taking public speaking classes.

Debunking or at least contextualising the dropout-hero narrative is more important now than ever before. Learning should be a lifelong pursuit.

The rise of automation, coupled with the fact that people no longer stay in the same job for decades, means that versatility and ambition must be coupled with upskilling throughout our careers.

When I left MIT before graduating, I understood that this moment would not be the end of my education. And the most successful people are those who embrace every chance to know more than they did the day before.

I hope that the next generation of workers realise that, regardless of whether someone attends and graduates traditional university, the end of formal education is not the end of the intellectual journey. The greatest gift you can give yourself, and others, is the opportunity to learn.
Jalmoud can put you in the mood in Queen’s Vase

FOR MANY, the highlight of the five days at Royal Ascot is tomorrow’s Gold Cup, but if you’re looking for a fixture Gold Cup winner it may well be running in this afternoon’s Queen’s Vase (3.05pm).

The last two victors of this Group Two contest, Kew Gardens and Stradivarius, have gone on to bigger and better things.

Kew Gardens landed the St Leger at Doncaster last September and Stradivarius had an even greater time of it the following month when winning the inaugural WH Stayers’ Million, so reducing the distance of the race and upgrading it to a Group Two for 2019.

The last season, winning all five starts and scooping the inaugural WH Stayers’ Million, so reducing the distance of the race and upgrading it to a Group Two in 2017 has clearly worked.

Aidan O’Brien has won this six times, and he saddles the first and second favourites in the line-up, so there really shouldn’t be much between the stablemates.

Western Australia was only beaten a length by Magna Grecia in last year’s Group One Vertem Futurity Trophy and he Relished the extra distance when winning a Listed contest over 1m5f at Navan last month.

Stamina seems to be his forte and that is likely to be the case long term with Norway as well.

A full brother to the 2013 Derby winner Ruler Of The World, the son of Galileo was second to Sir Dragonet in the Chester Vase before finishing eighth at Epsom.

He could well be this year’s Kew Gardens, with all roads leading to Doncaster in the autumn, and Moore will hope he has picked right.

It is often folly to take on Ballydoyle in races like this, but I’m going to give it a shot with the Godolphin-owned Jalmoud who is improving at a rate of knots.

This will be only the fourth start of this most exciting horse in the line-up, so expecting that form to hold up.

Moonlight Spirit can’t be ruled out, although he was a little disappointing in a Group Three at Longchamp last month when only third of five.

The interesting one from an each-way perspective is Andrew Balding’s Dashing Willoughby.

He was less than a length behind Norway at Chester and looks certain to relish this extra distance, as did stablemate Count Octave two years ago when chasing home Stradivarius.

Back Suroor’s Final Song to deny speedy American rivals

SOME of the fillies that US trainer Wesley Ward has fielded in the Queen Mary Stakes (2.30pm) at Royal Ascot in recent years have been absolute monsters.

The likes of Lady Aurelia and Acapulco, who both won this race in devastating fashion, have built Ward a reputation for his muscular sprinters and both Anna’s Fast and Kimari will be feared today.

The former was a four-and-a-half length winner at Keeneland on debut, while Kimari blew her rivals away by a staggering 15 lengths at the same track.

Of those two performances, and on jockey bookings, the John Velazquez-ridden Kimari looks the stable’s leading hope but I’m not convinced she’ll have it all her own way.

The storms are brewing over Ascot and any rain that falls could dampen her chances, while the switch from four furlongs on the dirt at Keeneland to five furlongs on turf at Ascot isn’t entirely straightforward.

She’s the 11/2 joint-favourite with FINAL SONG, who carried the famous blue silks of Godolphin in an impressive win over course and distance last month.

The Charlie Appleby-trained daughter of Dark Angel quickened up nicely and stretched away from a good field to score by five lengths.

The going was soft that day and I think she’ll be able to cope with most ground, while the form of that race also looks strong.

The third, Star Alexander, scorching home by six lengths in a hot sprint at Bath over the weekend, and I’m expecting that form to hold up.

Godolphin are also represented by Ickworth, who handled soft ground to land a listed contest at the Curragh last time out.

If the rain does come, then she enteres equations and could be the one to chase home Final Song.
T SHOULD be all about glorious sunshine and fashion at Royal Ascot, but if some weather forecasts are to be believed racegoers could be scrambling for shelter with plenty of rain about.

The challenge for us tipsters is to anticipate how much, if any, will actually fall and what impact it will have on the ground.

Only eight runners are set to line up for the Prince of Wales’s Stakes (3.40pm) with Aidan O’Brien’s MAGICAL favourite for the feature contest on the second day of the meeting.

It is clear to see why she is just 15/8 with Ladbrokes as she is in terrific form and seems extremely versatile when it comes to both ground and trip.

She won the Group One Fillies & Mares Stakes over two furlongs further on soft ground at this very venue last October, before running Enable so close on decent ground in the Breeders’ Cup Turf.

The drop back to 10 furlongs hasn’t inconvenienced her in the slightest this campaign, completing three efforts over the trip already.

Stablemate Flag Of Honour must be sick to death of chasing her backside having finished second to her on all three of those victories.

She is unquestionably the one to beat here but faces a far stiffer test this afternoon and there may just be a little bit of value in taking her on.

Regular followers of this column will remember that I picked French raider WALDGEIST in last year’s Arc where he ran on to finish fourth.

That run was a little underwhelming as were his fifth place finishes in both the Breeders’ Cup Turf and the Hong Kong Vase.

All three of those starts were well below the form he showed last summer when he rattled off four Group race victories, including the Group One Grand Prix de Saint Cloud.

It could have been that he was simply feeling the effects of a busy campaign and too much travel when his season petered out like it did.

However, he looked a different horse when returning from a 140day break in late April to land the Group One Prix Ganay in scintillating fashion.

The combination of a drop in trip on rain-softened ground worked the oracle and he ran out a comprehensive winner from some useful types.

His masterful trainer has won this contest twice before with Maresuro (2007) and Byword (2010), so this has no doubt been the plan for some time.

At 11/2 in places, he looks well worth each-way support, particularly with any rain that falls a bonus.

Plenty will fancy last year’s unlucky Arc runner-up Sea Of Class to get back to winning ways, but this will be her first start of the season over an inadequate trip.

If the rain does materialise, that slight suspicion that may just be his extra two furlongs and there is a slight suspicion that may just be his ideal trip.

He is bound to be there or thereabouts but could be vulnerable to those with a few more gears.

If there is one to spoil the party from left field, it is likely to be Zabeel Prince who seems to be hitting his prime at the age of six.

He is lightly raced and has won both starts this campaign, including his latest victory at Group One level at Longchamp last time.

There is no doubt he seems to be blossoming in his old age, but he will need to step up again to shake up the leading contenders and isn’t guaranteed to stay.

Bill Esdaile previews the Royal Hunt Cup and Duke of Cambridge Stakes

Raise the stakes with Sand and Chilean in the Royal Hunt Cup

ROYAL Ascot features a number of big field competitive handicaps and the most famous of them is today’s Royal Hunt Cup (5.00pm), a 36-runner cavalry charge over the straight mile.

This is one of the biggest betting contests of the whole season and plenty of gambles have been landed over the years, though some have gone astray too.

A year later and Jeremy Noseda was back into 13/2, an astonishing price considering the competitiveness of the race, but he could only finish fifth.

In 2008, Luca Cumani’s Bankable was backed into 13/8, an astonishing price considering the competitiveness of the race, but he could only finish fifth.

A year later and Jeremy Noseda was landing the valuable prize with the 4/1 favourite Forgotten Voice, but tread carefully, he was the last winning market leader and since then eight of the last nine winners were double figure prices.

The big ante-post mover this year has been James Tate’s New Graduate ever since he bolted up in a mile handicap at Kipps in April.

The form of that race has worked out brilliantly with the second, third and fourth all coming out since and winning at least once.

However, he was rated 90 then and is now up to 105 so he is going to have to be every bit a Group horse to be winning this off that mark.

We have no idea if his draw in stall one is going to be an advantage or not, but only two of the last 10 winners came out of a single figure stall so I can’t imagine Tate would have chosen that berth.

At a best price 6/1 with Coral, he simply has to be opposed.

Last year’s winner Settle For Bay is bidding to become only the second dual winner of this race and the first in over 70 years after Master Mover went back-to-back in 1947 and 1948.

It wouldn’t be beyond the realms of possibility as he was a ridiculously easy winner 12 months ago and is only 6lbs higher today.

His run at Leopardstown earlier this month was a bit of an eye-catcher in the context of this race, although he will have questions to answer if the ground turns soft.

My first selection is RAISING SAND, who should be backed at 8/1 with Coral who are paying six places.

Jamie Osborne’s seven-year-old loves to get his toe in, so he will have no problems if conditions get testing, and he also adores Ascot’s straight track, having won here three times in his career.

He is drawn against the stands’ rail which could be an advantage and it would also be a fantastic story for a couple of reasons.

Just two weeks ago a fire ripped through Osborne’s Lambourn yard, while, if successful, Nicola Currie would become only the second female rider to win at Royal Ascot, 32 years after Gay Kelleway took the Queen Alexandra Stakes on Sprowston Boy.

If there is a draw bias, it’s worth having one on the far side and even though CHILEAN takes a bit more explaining, I think he is worth adding to the portfolio at a massive 4/1 with Coral from stall nine.

Martyn Meade’s Iffraaj colt won a heavy ground Group Three over 1m1f at Longchamp on his reappearance last season, beating Study Of Man who went on to land the French Derby two starts later.

The wheels came off slightly after that but Chilean clearly goes well fresh and if the ground deteriorates he will love it.

Dettori can strike in the Duke of Cambridge with Rawdaa

WITHOUT sounding like a broken record, the amount of rain that falls overnight will have a huge impact on all of this afternoon’s races, but arguably none more so than the Duke of Cambridge Stakes (4.20pm).

The mile contest for fillies and mares is packed full of decent ground performers with only a handful who can boast winning form on a softer surface.

Pretty Baby will be on plenty of shortlists as she handles cut in the ground, but her stamina over this sort of trip has never been tested before.

If she stays, she will take plenty of beating, but that’s a big risk if conditions get bad.

Sir Michael Stoute has often targeted this contest, having won four of the race’s 15 renewals, and holds a very strong hand with both Veracious and RAWDAA.

Both fillies bring strong form to the table, with Veracious’ third in last season’s Group One Coronation Cup some of the strongest form on offer.

She has been a little bit disappointing in two starts to date this term, but a return to that level of form would make her hard to beat here.

At 8/1 in places, she holds a strong each-way chance, but preference is for her stablemate Rawdaa who will be ridden by Frankie Dettori.

She caught the eye on her reappearance at Kempton when running on late to grab third and then raised her form to a new level when giving Lah Ti Dar a fright in a real battle for the Middleton Stakes at York.

That was over two furlongs further than today’s contest, but any significant softening of the ground will put greater emphasis on stamina.

Dettori is a master on the big occasion and will hopefully deliver the daughter of Teofilo late on and land the money at 9/2 with Coral.

England captain shakes off injury in remarkable show of power-hitting, writes Felix Keith

OIN Morgan was supposed to have a bad back. When England’s captain followed Jason Roy off the pitch, walking gingerly alongside the physio during Friday’s match against West Indies in Southampton, it looked like the favourites could be about to receive a hammer blow to their Cricket World Cup chances.

When the news was relayed that Morgan had suffered a back spasm the nightmare scenarios were laid to rest. But the fact he conducted his post-match press conference stood up indicated the discomfort he was in and the significance of his injury, described by the man himself as “an extremely bad back” which “creates a tremendous amount of pain”.

After three days of rest, physiotherapy, anti-inflammatory drugs, painkillers and plenty of speculation that he’d not be risked, it was Morgan who made his way into the middle at Old Trafford yesterday to conduct the toss with Afghanistan skipper Gulbadin Naib. He was pleased that he did.

“I didn’t think at any stage it was going to be my day,” Morgan said after picking up his man of the match award at the close of play. He wasn’t the only one.

After his first six balls, in which he played out five dots and took a solitary single, commentators were uncharacteristically questioning whether the left-hander was fit enough to play. Over the course of his next 71 deliveries he proved definitively that he was. In an eye-popping barrage he began a one-man quest to put the game well beyond the reach of Afghanistan and write record after record.

He had some help to get going – chucking of the first of his many sizes off a free hit following a no-ball – but, perhaps emboldened by his back problem, Morgan showed absolutely no mercy, propelling himself into the solid platform built by Jonny Bairstow’s 90 and Joe Root’s 88 to give England their highest ever World Cup score of 397-7.

Cricket is a game well-suited to numbers and Morgan gave Afghanistan a torrid time while providing the statisticians an enjoyable challenge. He made a mockery of the fact that since 2015 Old Trafford is the English ground with the lowest first-innings average score in one-day international- als, hammering an ODI record 17 sixes in his innings of 148 from 77 balls.

On the way he recorded the fourth-fastest World Cup century while contributing greatly to ensuring the opposition’s main threat, Rashid Khan, ended with figures of 0-110 and instead merely appreciate a huge day run-scoring prowess came from his extraordinary power, but also his ingenuity. In Manchester it was simple, brutal and consistent ball-striking. Everything he connected with disappeared over the rope. Rashid’s darting leg-spin, Gulbadin’s medium pace, Mohammad Nabi’s off-breaks, Mujeeb Ur Rahman’s bag of tricks and Dawlat Zadran’s skiddy seamers – their bad balls and long hops, but also deliveries just inches off the mark. Wide long-off all the way round to backward square-leg was peppered. Morgan scored so fast it was hard to make sense of it all. It was best not to instead merely appreciate a sportsman operating in the very centre of a purple patch.

Hamilton closing in on Schumacher’s record collection

Brit has reached level of dominance not seen since the German, says Michael Searles

HAMILTON is win in Canada may have been one of the most controversial Lewis Hamilton has claimed but what cannot be disputed is that the Briton is now dominating Formula One to an almost unprecedented level.

At times such as two weekends ago, when he was handed the victory by race officials’ decision to penalise Sebastian Vettel, Hamilton must feel as though he can do no wrong.

And as he goes in search of a sixth world title, having already amassed a lead of 29 points over team-mate Valtteri Bottas and 62 over Vettel, there is little sign of his reign letting up.

Hamilton has claimed four of the five championships that Mercedes have won in as many years – an era of dominance that is about to best even that of Michael Schumacher and Ferrari during the early 2000s.

The 33-year-old has already taken Schumacher’s record for most pole positions – he is now on 45 compared to the German’s 68 – and is quickly closing in on the seven world titles that looked unmatchable back in 2004.

At this weekend’s French Grand Prix, Hamilton will go in search of his sixth win in eight races this season, and fourth in a row. In the two races that he didn’t win he came second to Bottas, and has now taken his tally for consecutive podium finishes to nine.

His longest streak of 16 is still three short of Schumacher’s record of 19, but with 13 races to go this year and Mercedes as strong as ever, it looks possible.

With 21 races this year, Hamilton is on course for a sixth world title this season he also has a great chance to set a new record for podiums in one season. The record of 17 is shared between him, Schumacher and Vettel, although the seven-time champion did it during a 17-race campaign.

He is also 13 wins off Schumacher’s all-time record of 91, and while it would take a perfect remainder of the season from Hamilton to match, it could feasibly be surpassed next year.

The French Grand Prix is where the ex-Ferrari man holds the record for most wins at the same race with eight, although Hamilton did match his seven wins in Canada last time out.

Hamilton is also in esteemed company when it comes to most pole positions at one grand prix. He joins Schumacher and Ayrton Senna, who each have claimed eight.

Hamilton can beat that record with another pole at Australia next season, but he has also claimed first in qualifying six times at five other races, showcasing his sheer speed over one lap too.

No one has more consecutive finishes in the points than the former McLaren driver’s 33, spanning from Japan in 2016 to France in 2018, although previously only the top six were awarded points, compared to today’s 10, making it harder to compare.

Hamilton is chipping away at the records he is yet to hold, although he has his eyes on a dynasty even greater than Schumacher’s, insisting recently that he could race for another five years.

“Michael retired when he was 38. I’m 33. In my mind I definitely do five years,” he said. “I could easily let go of it right now but I’ve got to keep going for as long as I can, until I’m not enjoying it.”
Japan offer Lionesses chance to loosen handbrake

England have been professional if unspectacular at World Cup, writes Frank Dalleres

England can match that if they beat Japan for the second time in Neville’s tenure. Neville has been relentless in his demand for high standards since being appointed 18 months ago. Results have been broadly good – 13 wins from 21 games – albeit perhaps a little more mixed than might be expected, given the former Manchester United defender’s message.

England players have welcomed his emphasis on passing after the more direct tactics of the Mark Sampson era, while the SheBelievers Cup – although only a friendly invitational tournament – Franked their form against teams of the highest calibre.

On the other hand, it is debatable over how much to read into that win over Japan in Florida, given that both sides rested players, and subsequent 1-0 defeats against Canada and New Zealand – the latter just this month – have checked their momentum.

For all of their professionalism under Neville, England have rarely cut loose lately. Having hit 20 in their first eight fixtures of his reign, they have netted only 17 in 13 matches since, with four of their six wins in 2019 coming by a one-goal margin.

This evening offers a chance to loosen the handbrake. England are already through and need only avoid defeat to top the group and ensure they will meet a third-placed team in the first knockout round, so they can afford to throw caution to the wind in Nice.

The return from injury of midfielder Toni Duggan, one of Neville’s most-used players, adds another weapon to England’s armament.

There is sense in starting slowly and growing into a tournament, of course, but another 3-0 win over Japan would do no harm at all.

FRANCE SCORE TWO LATE GOALS TO SINK UNDER-21S

France also had to settle for a 2-1 win over Scotland in the Under-21 Championships with a 2-1 defeat by France last night.

Phil Foden’s brilliant run and finish gave England the lead, but Harsha Choudhury was sent off for a poor challenge which gifted France one of two penalties which they missed. But Jonathan Ikone netted and Wan-Bissaka miscued a clearance into his own net in the 95th minute to settle it.

MARTA’S 17TH WORLD CUP GOAL SEES BRAZIL QUALIFY

Martinek became the all-time leading goalscorer at Women’s World Cups last night as her strike saw Brazil beat Italy 1-0. The striker’s second-half penalty was her 17th in the competition and sealed Brazil’s place in the last 16, although Italy still only managed to score one of two penalties which they missed. But Jonathan Ikone netted and Wan-Bissaka miscued a clearance into his own net in the 95th minute to settle it.
