CRYPTO &amp; COFFEE

Following the announcement by PayPal earlier in the week that the online payments company will finally begin its much-rumoured support for cryptocurrencies, the company decided to surprise markets participants with a follow up statement yesterday, which indicated that it is looking into conducting M&A. Specifically, it is looking to acquire crypto companies, with BitGo named as potential target. According to Bloomberg reports citing sources, talks could still fall apart and PayPal could opt to buy other targets.

Elsewhere, The Block writes that about six months after Paul Tudor Jones made his original investment case for bitcoin, the famed hedge funder says he likes bitcoin even more. In an interview with CNBC on Thursday, Jones — who leads Tudor Investment Corp — said that he was even more bullish on the digital asset, which he views as a potential hedge against aggressive central bank monetary policy.

Looking at the broader market price action this week and at the time of writing, large-cap MVIS index was up 10% vs Monday and mid-caps up 3.3%, while small-cap index was actually trading flat. It will be interesting to see whether the bullish sentiment will see small-caps stage a rally into the year-end, as it stands large-caps are in the lead even relative to mid-cap counterparts when looking at year-to-date (YTD) performance.
